Excerpt: .more or less concentric layers about a central core and the density increases from the outer layers ( $\mu=1.40$ ) to the core ( $\mu = 1.44$ ). When they enter the cornea from the air, light rays undergo the main part of the refraction which occurs in the eye, because the densities of the two media are so different. The other considerable refraction occurs on the passage of the rays through the denser substance of the crystalline lens. In the complex system of the eye the refractive index and the radius of curvature of each part is known and the surfaces, although not accurately centred, are sufficiently nearly so to make it possible to find mathematically a single surface which represents the whole. This is used in the construction of the Schematic Eye (Fig.41). The single refracting surface is made to lie a few millimetres behind the real cornea. In the unaccommodated eye distant objects are clearly seen, which must mean that the rays from them, which are parallel or nearly so, form sharp images on the light-sensitive surface. The refracting surface of the schematic eye, to represent this, has its principal focal plane on the retina. From a distant point object situated in any part of the visual field, we know the course of one ray, that which is directed straight for the noal point of the simplified eye and which is not changed in its direction before reaching the retina. By the previous argument we...
